CITIES REQUESTED TO AID AIR MAIL PILOTS

At the meeting of the City Council held last Monday evening a communication was received from the Postal Department, urging Daly City, and all cities in the line of traffic, to place the name of their city on some roof, that it may be a guide to aerial transportation. This request was discussed, and finally placed in the hands of the advertising committee for further investigation.

The city engineer approved the pavement work in the City Park, and it was ordered that the contractor be paid.

A communication was received from the Los Angeles Ladder Company, concerning equipment bought for the fire department, which was referred to the chief of the fire department for adjustment.

Two protests were received concerning street work and sidewalks in the lower portion of the Metropolis Homestead Tract. As this section is in the industrial district, where this work is not of great benefit, the Council agreed to the demand.

The Park committee ordered the curbs around the improved section of the Park painted white, to stop all traffic, as it has been reported that machines have driven over this pavement. The Council urges all residents in that section to report the number of any machine driving over the pavement to the police department—and the Judge will do the rest.

The library committee reported the addition of forty new books last month, and many improvements in the library.

After the bills and salaries for the month had been ordered paid, the board adjourned to meet again on Monday, March 11.

CROCKER TERRACE RESIDENT DIES FOLLOWING OPERATION

Military funeral services were held at the Presidio on last Monday for Richard C. Rush, of Frankfort street, veteran customs officer, who passed away at the Letterman General hospital following an operation for appendicitis.

Mr. Rush had been in the customs service in San Francisco for twenty-five years, during the greater portion of which time he had presided at the gate on arrival of liners from all parts of the world. The task of a gateman is recognized as one of the most difficult in the service. Mr. Rush's memory for faces made him an asset on the detail.

Mr. Rush was born in Chicago, 67 years ago. He joined the First U. S. Infantry, became a first sergeant, and was recommended for promotion during the Blackfoot and Sioux uprisings. He was a member of the first landing party in Cuba. After the Spanish-American war he came to San Francisco. He is survived by the widow, Mrs. Frances C. Rush, and a step-son, George A .Ryan.

Mr. and Mrs. Rush were the first people to purchase a home in Crocker Terrace, in the row of homes built on Frankfort street, their home being at 488 Frankfort street.

CALVARY MISSION ENTERTAINS VISITORS

Visitors from San Jose, Sunnyvale and Palo Alto were present at the Sunday evening service at Calvary Baptist Mission, 5724 Mission street.

This being the Sunday nearest Washington's birthday, a partiotic service was in order. Patriotic songs were sung and the pastor spoke upon the theme "Great Names." Many names are great in the eyes of the world, but according to Phil. 2:9-10, the name of Jesus has been exalted above them all. He has been given a name that is above every name.

Both church school and church services were well attended. The new quarters enable the Mission to do more effective work than before. Refreshments were served to the guests before they returned.

Notice of the regular services of Calvary Mission appear elsewhere in this paper.

GENERAL PERSHING SCHOOL

The General Pershing school Parent-Teachers' Association was organized on Thursday afternoon at the school house. Through the efforts of the incoming officers and parents and teachers the kindergarten room became the reception room, where the tables were decorated in blue and gold. Tea, sandwiches and home made cake were served to all present, and by the hearty co-operation shown by all present the welfare of the General Pershing school is assured. The new officers are well known women who have done everything to make Daly City just a little better place to live in, and the schools a little brighter to study in. Full details will be given next week.

DALY CITY GIRL WINS FLAG AS ESSAY PRIZE

May Richardson, a member of Mrs. Packard's class in the fifth grade in the Crocker school, has been awarded an American flag for writing the best short story of an incident in George Washington's life. In addition to the satisfaction of having proved victorious in the contest, Miss Richardson has placed her school before the public in a most commendable light by her performance.

The contest was conducted by the San Francisco News. According to the rules of the contest, the contestants were not to work for a prize for themselves, but were to work for a prize for their class. May's story was chosen as the best by Mother Hubbard, who headed the club, though over 200 children competed.

"I pledge allegiance to the flag of the United States and to the republic for which it stands; one nation invisible with liberty and justice," was the pledge of the Crocker students when Miss Richardson presented to the school the flag which had been awarded her.

FINANCIAL CANVASS BY GRACE CHURCH

Preparations for a thorough and efficient financial canvass among the members and constituency of Grace Presbyterian church are well under way. Some very attractive literature for distribution has been received by the committee. One piece entitled "Seven Reasons Why We Support the Church" is a leaflet beautifully printed in two colors, and profusely illustrated with many interesting and captivating pictures of boys and girls and young people of different races and types, living under the Stars and Stripes of various climes from Alaska to Porto Rico; other pictures of youth in distant lands—all reached and benefitted by the ministries of the church.

The pamphlet is entitled "The Presbyterian Church Serves the Youth of the World." This literature is limited in number, and those who are fortunate to receive it should read it carefully, and show it to their friends. It is a graphic presentation of the value of the church to this community, to the nation, and abroad.

Interest in, and loyalty to the church in one's own community is a worthy quality.

For those who believe in the church as a valuable and essential factor in the community there are two very practical ways to demonstrate that belief. One is by attending regularly the services in your neighborhood church. The other is by contributing regularly and generously to the support of that same church. The slogan "Support your neighborhood grocer," or "your neighborhood printer," might well be complemented with "Support your neighborhood church." They all make for a stronger and better community. In other words, patronize home religion as well as home industries.

One excellent opportunity will soon be presented in the big "every member" canvass to be officially inaugurated on March 10 at Grace Presbyterian church. It will not attract such nation-wide interest as the inauguration ceremony on March 4, but it is of real significance to this community, and will be well worth attending and having a share in it.

PARTY IN CELEBRATION OF SIXTEENTH BIRTHDAY

On Saturday, February 23, Mrs. D. Whitehead gave a party in honor of her son Raymond's sixteenth birthday at their beautiful home at 128 Woodrow street. The evening was enjoyably spent in games and dancing. The home was prettily decorated in pastel shades. A buffet supper was served.

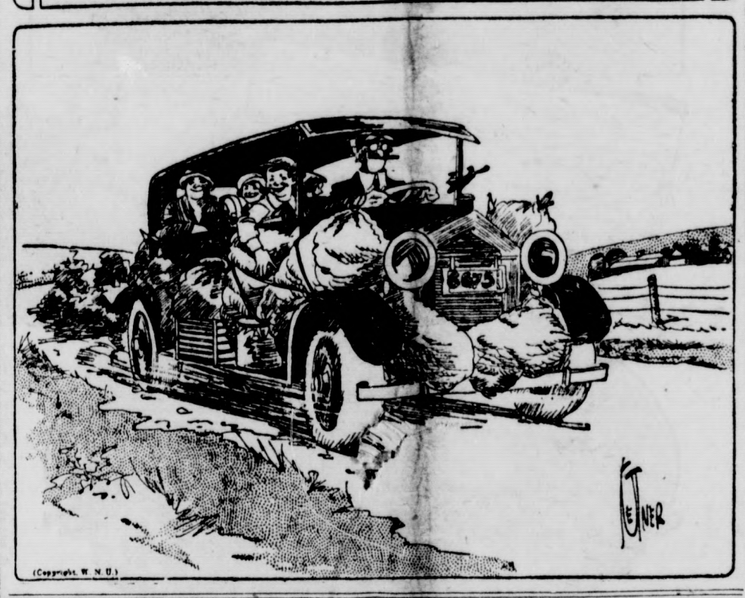
Among the guests present were: Mary Kaiden, Alice Rooker, Dorothy Cohn, Roberta McGovern, Olive Stone, Margaret Stone and Harriet Whitehead; Messrs. Arthur Mangan, Donald Harris, Geoffrey Capell, Joe Purcell, Francis Guzman and Jimmie Tuck.

The party was chaperoned by Mrs. D. Whitehead, Emma Tuck, of Fresno, Mrs. A. M. Harrison, Mrs. Cecelia Grant and Mr. Herbert Grant, who enjoyed themselves in seeing the younger folks having a good time. Raymond received many useful gifts.

ENTERTAINS ROYAL NEIGHBORS

Mrs. Bill Hopman, of Eastlake avenue, entertained members of Vista Grande Camp, Royal Neighbors of America, at her home Tuesday evening, February 26. Whist and bridge were enjoyed, and at 10:30 p. m. refreshments were served by the hostess. A most delightful evening was enjoyed by all. Among those present were Mesdames White, Smith, Putney, Cliver, Bruiley, Hedvall, Scott, Nelson, Gehringer, Rampe, Romer, Lena Wilson, Landini, Welch, Burdick, Twesten, Hopman, and Misses Hazel Wilson and Nelson.

Going Home from a Homecoming



P. T. A. IS ORGANIZED FOR CROCKER SCHOOL

Last Wednesday a group of ladies met at the home of Mrs. Julia Jordan, on Bellevue avenue, for the purpose of organizing a Crocker Parent-Teachers' Association. Miss V. Roussel, Seventeetnh District president, Mrs. L. G. Owen of the advisory board and Mrs. J. E. Baughn, financial secretary and membership chairman, were honor guests. Mrs. Owen acted as chairman.

After it was agreed to organize, the following officers were elected: President, Mrs. Ivy Alexander; Vice-President, Mrs. K. McDermott; Secretary, Mrs. Julia Jordan; Treasurer, Mrs. I. Reiman; Historian, Mrs. Grace Augustien; Parliamentarian, Mrs. Hughes; Auditor, Mrs. A. Chesney.

A spirit of enthusiasm prevailed throughout the meeting, Mrs. Owen giving a very nice talk to the newly elected officers and complimenting them on the large number of charter members. Miss Roussel installed the officers and instructed each in her respective duties. Mrs. Baughn gave some helpful advice on financial matters, and also several items of interest on gaining and holding members. The members voted the dues should be 50 cents, and selected the fourth Wednesday as the meeting day.

The new president took the chair and said she looked forward to a year of happiness and helpfulness to those in our community, and felt proud of having been chosen to head such a capable body of officers.

Following adjournment, a social hour was enjoyed, tasty refreshments being served by the hostess, Mrs. Jordan. And thus Crocker Parent-Teachers' Association was organized and is ready to help make Daly City a "better place to live."

PIONEER TRUSTEE OF DALY CITY DEAD

Dennis Quillinan, a pioneer of Daly City and a member of the first board of trustees of Daly City following incorporation, where he served the city for one year, passed away at his home on last Tuesday morning, after an illness of several months' duration.

Mr. Quillinan was the beloved husband of Sarah Quillinan, and loving father of Erward, Dennis, Francis, Aloysius, James, Nora and Frances Quillinan, Mrs. V. P. Dailey and Mrs. Charles Drago, and brother of Nora Halsey, and step-father of Robert, Emmett, Mary, Gwendolyn and Gladys McLaughlin.

Funeral services were held Thursday morning from W. C. Lasswell & Co. mortuary chapel, thence to St. Maximus church, where a mass was celebrated for the repose of his soul.

Brother officers of the special police force of the Southern Pacific Campany were the pallbearers. Interment was at Holy Cross cemetery.

PIONEER IN SCOUTING TO AID LOCAL TROOP

During the Boy Scout anniversary week a drive for funds was made by members of Troops 103 and 149. The money contributed, $40 in all, goes to the San Mateo County Council of the Boy Scouts of America and is used by officials who utilize it for the advancement of Scouting in every department of the great work.

Daly City can assist the boys in many other ways. The sort of help that is appreciated is the attendance of people at public exhibitions and drills, and the encouragement of boys by their parents to join the Scouts.

Troop 149 is an example of applied energy. This troop, which was organized with a very small number of boys, has gradually developed into a flourishing troop.

It will be but a short while until Troop 103 will be in close competition with its rival troop, and it is hoped that the people of Daly City will come to see the labors of each troop to outdo each other in signalling, drilling, first aid, fire-building, knot tieing, and the many activities that are tuaght in Scouting.

Chester Smith, Scoutmaster of 149, with his assistants, Alfred Petersen and Woodrow Olsen, will be pitted against Carl Rehbock, leader of 103, with Raymond Heinrichs and Al Ennis. Carl Rehbock has been fortunate in securing the aid of A. W. Saddler, a former Scoutmaster of the largest troop in Chicago, and the oldest man in Scouting in the United States. Mr. Saddler, who joined the Boy Scouts in England, will pass his twenty-first year in Scouting this year. He is a friend of Sir Robert Baden-Powell, founder of the Boy Scouts, and has a thorough knowledge of Scouting in every respect.

On Sunday, February 24, members of the two troops enjoyed a hike to their summer camp in Marin county, which is called Camp Rain. It acquired this odd name because the first Boy Scouts that slept there on an oven-night hike had to sleep through a saturating rain that lasted throughout the night. The camp is located near the ocean, in the hills. A little stream trickles past the camp and empties into the ocean. The hike was greatly enjoyed by the boys, who were in the charge of Carl Rehbock, Scoutmaster of Troop 103.

KEVE BARSKEY PASSES AWAY AT COMMUNITY HOSPITAL

Keve Barskey, of Los Olivos avenue, one of Daly City's pioneers, passed away at Community hospital last Monday, after an illness of several months duration. He was the beloved husband of Rebecca Barskey and loving father of Mrs. L. Atkins, John, Joseph, Morris, Isaac, Abe, Victor and Aaron Barskey. He was a native of Poland.

Funeral services were held last Wednesday afternoon in San Francisco, and interment was at Salem cemetery.

THE HIGH COST OF THE CHEAP SCHOOL

Experience has shown that the cheapest article may prove the dearest in the end, and so quality has become the slogan of reputable business and industry. Our schools have undergone the same experience and adapted the same slogan.

A piece of bad merchandise can be replaced by a better; an inferior educational training, however, may bring permanent injury. Fortunately, quality has begun to assume value as it relates to our schools. The sign is in the lengthening term of service given to superintendent and teacher. This is due to a realization by boards of education that it is expensive to lose a strong superintendent and good teacher from the community. An investment in the nature of a reasonable salary increment which will retain an able executive is small when the fate of a continued educational policy is at stake—when a community with a well organized, functioning school system is faced with the loss of a recognized leader and plays with odds on securing a less able executive.

Such a salary increase is insurance against depreciation—a preventive measure against lessened efficiency in the school system. The same situation may exist with the stronger personalities of the teaching staff. The departure of a mediocre teacher is of little moment; the removal from the class-room of a personality that radiates, cheer, hope, comradeship, courage and the will to work is a distinct loss.

In recent years there is an increasing evidence that school administration is a business and subject to the laws of business. Today business is a symbol of quality—quality in the character of products, quality in the calibre of its workers. We hear business executives tell of the lengths they go to secure these—how they specify betterments, enforce standards and evaluate trade-marks. School officials have an equal concern for their products.

Merchants employing large groups can tell you what labor turnover costs them. They can show you the expense of regaining a customer's interest lost through inferior service. Both items are expensive. They eat up profits. The business of school administration is as sensitive to these methods of investment as is every other business.

To maintain educational quality in the face of increasing attendance is the challenge. What it costs the schools to regain a pupil whose interest is lost through inefficient teaching or management is not known in figures, nor can the loss to a community by the substitution of a weaker for a stronger type of teacher be measured. Parents who have experienced either will say that the experimenting is expensive; that the loss is so self-evident it should be avoided. If, in a spirit of thoughtless economy, it is not prevented, such economy may prove to be costly and extravagant.

The value of a commodity lies in the quality of its service. The buying of good administration and teaching at the figure the market demands would seem less expensive than the buying of inferior service at bargain rates. That school system which retains the interest of pupils and gives valued service through the executive and teaching force, may prove more economical than a system costing less per pupil but unable to hold the pupil's interest and giving mediocre service through a less efficient teaching staff.

The quality of school service depends on holding the interest of its customers and confining the labor turnover to the less efficient. Such procedure will go far toward remedying the high cost of cheap schools.

AIR MAIL SUBJECT OF PROPOSED BILL

Bill No. 16131, introduced in the House by Representitive Clyde Kelly, of Pennsylvania, would enable the Postmaster General to make contracts for the transportation of mails by air from island possessions of the United States to foreign countries and to the United States and between such island possessions. It also authorizes him to make contracts with private individuals and corporations for the conveyance of mails by air in foreign countries. This measure has passed the committee on Post Office and Post Roads and placed on the calendar of the House. It is expected that some action will be taken upon it during the present session of Congress.

ST. PATRICK'S CELEBRATION BY ST. MAXIMUS CHURCH

The annual St. Patrick's day entertainment and dance under the auspices of St. Maximus church will be held this year in the Daly City Auditorium on Saturday evening, March 16, at 8 o'clock. A wonderful program has already been arranged. Watch for it in the next issue of the Record.

BOARD WOULD STOP CUTTING OF TREES

The San Mateo county board of supervisors last Monday instructed Sheriff James J. McGrath to investigate charges that San Francisco casket manufacturers are cutting redwood timber on the right of way of the Pescadero creek road. Sewerage from the lumber camps is also being dumped into the creek above the county memorial park where San Mateo county Boy Scouts maintain a swimming pool, it is charged.

A portion of the new Pescadero-La Honda road just north of the memorail park was ordered closed pending the completion of construction now under way.

District Attorney Franklin Swart was granted a twenty days leave of absence in order to attend the Hoover inaugural at Washington.

Application of Frank Feliz, Menlo Park, for a soft drink sales permit was denied when the board was informed that Feliz is awaiting prosecution on a liquor charge.

The East Palo Alto Water company applied to the board to reduce the water company's rates and the Lomita Park Developement association asked that the county provide for sweeping streets in Lomita Park at least once each month.

ODD WAGERS ARE OFFERED ON THE OPENING OF BRIDGE

Excited over the prospects of becoming the eastern terminus of the San Francisco bay bridge, the world's longest bridge, the city of Hayward, in Alameda county, has become subject to an epidemic of odd wagers, not rivalled there even during the recent presidential election.

All of the wagers pertain to the opening of the new bridge, set for tomorrow, March 2, and they include everything from housewives cakes, and clam bakes, to a trip across the seven-mile structure in a baby carriage.

George Moffitt, man about town and accredited with ownership of one of the two black derbies in the city, has agreed to pilot Harry McDonald, advertising man, across the colossal structure in a baby carriage if the bridge is not opened on March 2. If the structure is opened to public service on March 2, Moffitt will ride, while McDonald pushes at the handles.

Dr. Cecil Corwin and W. A. Hutchins, two other well known residents of the city, have wagered a wheelbarrow ride on the opening date.

Much interest attaches to the bridge structure in Hayward for the reason that that city will become the focal point in bay traffic following the opening of the bridge. The span, which reduces running time from Sacramento and San Joaquin valley points from twenty minutes to one hour, will be completed 105 days ahead of schedule with its opening, which has been defintely set by bridge officials and engineers for Saturday, March 2.

YOUNG PEOPLE WELCOME TO THE CALVARY MISSION

The Young Men's Bible class of Calvary Baptist Mission, otherwise known as the "Live Wires," are going to broadcast a Baptist Young People's Union Meeting by radio. This is to be the real stuff. You will be able to hear it the same as you hear on your radio, only you will have to come to the church to hear it. The "Live Wires" have a splendid quartet which you will be delighted to hear, and besides that there will be several musical solos and some real surprises. The songs, the talks, everything, will be broadcast, and given entirely by young people. This meeting is going to be something different than perhaps you think, and the young folks feel sure you will enjoy it. The time is 6:40 p. m., at Calvary Baptist Mission, located at Mission, near Oliver. (Look for the sign.) You are especially invited to come to this meeting because the young folks feel that they have something worth while to present to you. These B. Y. P. U. meetings are of the inspirational and educational type and carry out as far as possible the teachings of the Bible, standard of all Christian living. They have as their motto, "Loyaly to Christ."

HIJACKERS CHARGED WITH SHOOTING MAN ON SKYLINE

As a result of the activities of two hijackers on the Skyline boulevard, near Lake Merced, last Monday, L. G. Miller, San Francisco, is in St. Luke's hospital suffering from a gunshot wound in the abdomen.

Miller declares that two men in an automobile forced him to one side of the roadway and told him to get out of his car. When he obeyed one of the men fired at him. The other jumped into his automobile and both machines were driven away. In Miller's car, police report finding twenty gallons of moonshine whiskey.

YOUR BANK AND HOW TO USE IT

THE TRUST DEPARTMENT
(Part Two)

Although it may not be generally understood, the business side of trust service is as complete as the personal and domestic side. All business functions are handled by the Corporate Trust division and by certain units of the other divisions. Corporate trust service will not only aid in the establishment of a business by acting as trustee, registrar and transfer agent of stock issues, but will also act as the treasurer and fiscal agent of that business as well as an aid to making its corporate operations more convenient and secure. The escrow feature of the private trust division aids directly in the establishment or the expansion of a business enterprise. For instance, if a man is seeking a site or busilding to start a mercantile establishment, he may arrange with the owner of such site or building that all or part of the purchase price be placed in escrow with the Trust Department until all titles can be cleared and recorded and the property made ready for transfer. If he wishes to expand by buying out a competitor, he can also place the purchase price in escrow until the property can be transferred unencumbered. There are innumerable other phases of escrow service which appeal to the enterprising business man.

Corporate trust service is compulsory under the law and the rules laid down by the State Commissioner of Corporations during the preliminary period of the financing of any business capitalized by stock issues. In each instance the company must appoint a trust company or bank as registrar, subject to the order of the State Corporation Commission.

The personal application of trust service is varied and intensely helpful and interesting. For instance, a scientist or a professional man, whose training ordinarily precludes any familiarity with finance and investments, may be induced by a high pressure salesman to buy some attractive looking stocks. Or he may have bought such stocks upon his own initiative without consultation or advice.

It has never occurred to him that he should be able to analyze the securities that he has purchased. Thus when the general market for securities becomes somewhat uncertain, or his investment defaults in the payment of dividends, he may appeal to his bank to set him aright. The Trust Department assumes the burden, surveys the securities and brings about an adjustment in which they are either sold and reinvested in surer and safer investments, or the client's outlay is salvaged in some other manner, equally productive and secure.

It may happen that a client wishes to take a long trip and does not care to leave his affairs in inexperienced hands while he is away. He places his property in trust for the duration of the journey and as long thereafter as he pleases, and is thereby relieved of all the attendant worries. This is a particularly attractive feature of trust service.

A widow may seek to make the best possible investment of the proceeds of the life insurance policies in which she is the beneficiary. Perhaps, before she is aware, she may have become the victim of unsound or designing advice, thus jeopardizing her funds. The Trust Department will handle both situations, obtaining prime investments on the one hand and salvaging the unwisely invested funds on the other.

Some of the intergral operations of trust service are extremely interesting when viewed from the standpoint of the attorney. Recently an attorney in a Northern California city informed a trust officer that a client had died leaving $500,000 in personal property and that the court had demanded that the executor bond himself for $500,000 also, as provided by law, because the will had not waived such a bond. The payment of the premiums on such a large bond would be extremely burdensome, the attorney said. Could the trust officer do anything about it?

He was told that the laws of the state empowered the Trust Department to act as despository for the personal property, and that the court thereupon would exact only a nominal ond. This was made possible because banks operating Trust Departments are compelled to deposit with the State Treasurer ample funds to guarantee all of its trusts, which are under the direction of the State Superintendent of Banks. He reluctantly agreed to follow this procedure, but later admitted that the service was simply ideal and should be utilized by all attorneys and executors in similar cases.

No one who is interested in the saving of his money or the conservation of his business and domestic interests should fail to avail himself of the benefits of trust service. Such service is as deeply concerned with administering the affairs of the living as of those who have passed on. There is nothing intricate or involved about the operation of a Trust Department. It is committed to the service of every client, no matter how exalted or how lowly his estate in life.

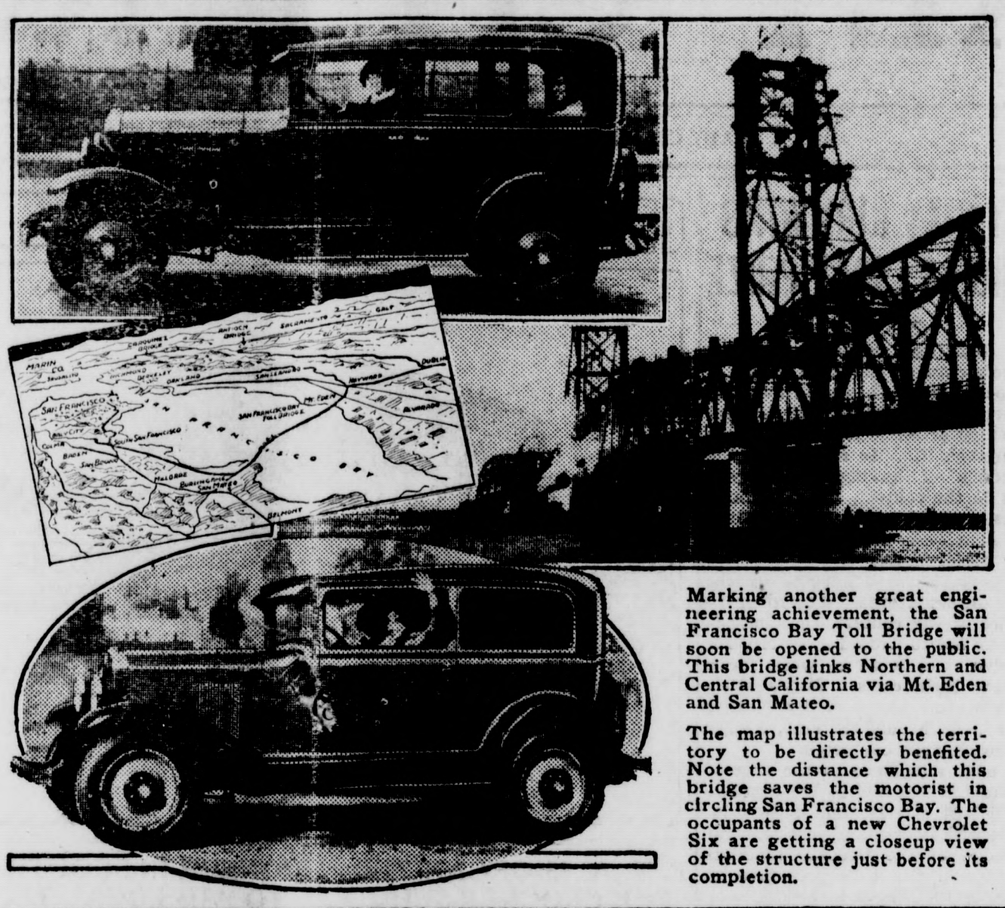
The service of the Bank of Italy's Trust Department covers California like the sunshine. It can be found in the heart of the great cities and in the remote cabins of the miner and the wood-chopper. Its operations are conducted with the idea of serving as completely as possible the needs of the people of the state for highly specialized, all inclusive and economical service of this type.

BYRD'S FAREWELL TO HIS MOTHER CROSSES CONTINENT

The last thing that Commander Richard E. Byrd did before leaving Los Angeles on his scientific expedition to the South Pole regions was to make long distance calls to his mother, Mrs. R. E. Byrd, at Winchester, Va., and his brother, Governor Harry Byrd, at Richmond, Va.

A special telephone line had been placed on board the whaler C. A. Larsen in the Los Angels harbor so as to enable the aviator-explorer to say good-bye to his family just before the vessel weighed anchor for its two years expedition to the Antarctic regions.

Bridge to Be Opened to Traffic in March



Marking another great engineering achievement, the San Francisco Bay Toll Bridge will soon be opened to the public. This bridge links Northern and Central California via Mt. Eden and San Mateo.

The map illustrates the territory to be directly benefited. Note the distance which this bridge saves the motorist in circling San Francisco Bay. The occupants of a new Chevrolet Six are getting a closeup view of the structure just before its completion.

WESTERN PACIFIC TO SPEND $3,500,000 IN IMPROVEMENTS

The 1929 program of the Western Pacific Railroad Company and its subsidiary lines for improvements in existing roadway and equipment will involve an expenditure of aproximately $3,5000,000. This program does not include projects for the construction of new lines either under way or decided upon.

The Western Pacific program contemplates an expenditure for improvements and maintenance, outside of ordinary maintenance, of $3,000,000, of which $1,400,000 is chargeable to operating expenses and $1,600,000 will be for new work. Principal items in the Western Pacific program are:

Improvement in freight train equipment, etc., $1,000,000.

Bank widening and ballasting, $890,000.

Extension of yards and lengthening of passing tracks, $230,000.

Three steel bridges in Nevada to replace wooden structures, $85,000.

The Sacramento Northern Railway, which recently acquired the properties of the Sacramento Short Line, has a program for the expenditure of $318,0000, of which $66,0000 is to be charged to operating expenses and $252,000 to capital account. This does not include the amount required to complete the construction of the 16-mile Holland branch. The sum required to complete the Holland branch is $600,000 and it is expected that this branch will be ready for operation about May 1.

The program for the Tidewater Southern Railway totals $165,000, of which $56,000 is to be charged to operating expenses and $109,000 to capital account.

The program of the Sacramento Northern and the Tidewater Southern includes expenditures for additional improvements in yard and passing tracks, track improvements and the substitution of permanent structures for wood culverts and bridges.

FARM FIRE INSURANCE

Farmers throughout the country are insuring their property against fire loss to a greater extent than formerly, a recent survey by the Department of Agriculture shows. In ten years the amount of farm insurance in force increased from six billion dollars to ten billion dollars.

A great deal of this insurance is carried by mutual insurance companies organized by the farmers themselves, and the average rate is very low, being only about 26 cents a year for each $100 of insurance. Insurance is carried very generally in the Northern states, while a majority of the farmers in the Southern states carry little or none.

Considering the very low rate at which farm insurance may be obtained, it would seem that every prudent farmer would avail himself of this means of protection.

It was perhaps nine o'clock when I returned, to find the rector and his wife calling, and to sit through an hour and a half of gently unctuous conversation, while my uneasiness constantly increased, and my sense of guilt and responsibility. If we had warned the old man he would have been at least prepared to take care of himself in an emergency, but we had foolishly kept our knowledge to ourselves, and even allowing for exaggeration on Annie Cochran's part, there seemed no doubt that such an emergency might be at hand.

At 10:30 our visitors took their departure, and leaving Jane prepared to retire and Edith to answer some of her letters, I wandered with apparent aimlessness down to the boathouse. Halliday was not there, and as the dory was missing I knew he was somewhere out on the water. After waiting until eleven, my restlessness was extreme and I walked up and around the main house, to find the garage doors open and the car still out.

Had there been any indication of life in the building, I think I would have wakened Mr. Bethel and warned him; stayed with him, perhaps, until that murderous young devil was safely settled for the night. But his room was dark and his windows closed, so I thought better of it. But I did ascertain that the gun-room windows were locked, and that if the boy effected an entrance at all, it would be by some less surreptitious method.

Thus reassured, I went back to the boathouse, and soon after Halliday rowed quietly in and tied the dory.

I told him my story, but he was less anxious than I had expected.

"It's not the game," he said. "If Gordon is the killer, we've got to consider that he doesn't kill out of anger. That's different. He's cool and deliberate; he plans his stuff ahead and goes through with it. I don't even think he gets any thrill out of crime itself; the real secret joy is in baffling discovery. And he knows this: after the quarrel tonight, if old Bethel fell down the stairs and broke his neck, he would be blamed for it."

But he thrust his army automatic in his pocket nevertheless, and we started toward the house, with no particular plan in mind, but a fixed determination to protect Mr. Bethel "in case of any trouble," as Halliday put it.

We had almost reached the end of the walk over the marsh when he halted suddenly and stared to the right.

"There was a light over there," he said. "In the woods. Wait a minute: maybe it will show again."

It did show, above the head of Robinson's point apparently, in that lonely strip of woodland which leads to the hiding place of the boat.

Halliday watched it, and then passed his revolver to me, first taking off the safety catch.

"Don't fall over anything," he warned me. "And don't shoot until you see the whites of his eyes! I'm going over there, Skipper."

He set off on a steady lope, heading for the light but obliged to make a long detour around the marsh. I myself, holding the revolver gingerly, started on to the house.

I was feeling, comparatively speaking, relaxed. I felt, as did Halliday, that Gordon was near Robinson's point; my duty, as I saw it, was simply to stand guard until Halliday returned and we could make some plan; in case of trouble later to get into the house, if possible.

This thought, that we might want to get into the house, bothered me. My keys were at the Lodge, and I could hardly hope to secure them without disturbing Jane. I made, as a result, another round of the windows, and was brought up short by the fact that one of the gun-room windows, certainly closed and locked before, now stood open.

It was the more startling, because I had but that moment ascertained that the garage doors still stood wide, and that the car was still missing.

I daresay every man has occasional doubts of his physical courage; but I daresay, too, that every man has a sort of spare reservoir of courage, on which he can draw in the emergency, when it comes. Yet I shall not pretend, even to myself, that I pulled up my shoulders, examined my weapon, and then boldly entered that window.

I crawled in, with knees that shook under me and a definite nausea in the pit of my stomach. And to make matters worse there was a slow footstep somewhere near, which I was a second or so in identifying as a drip from the old shower next door.

I had no doubt whatever, that Gordon had returned, and the very fact that he had come without the car made that return sinister. I groped for the door into the passage and stood there listening, but there was no sound, whatever, save the leak of the tap.

I reached the dining room without incident, and there a new thought struck me. Annie Cochran had represented the old gentleman as distinctly alarmed, and I myself had seen him some time before, more or less on guard, with a revolver. Suppose he saw a strange figure emerge from his dining room and start up the staircase? It seemed to me that he would have every right to shoot me first and investigate me afterwards.

It was while I hesitated there, near the sideboard, that I was first conscious of a cold air blowing around me. So distinct was it that my first thought was that some stealthy movement had opened the door to the passage behind me. Almost immediately on that there was a tremendous crash as though some heavy object had struck the dining-room table, and following that, the door into the hall burst open, slamming back against the wall outside. This was followed by complete silence.

So shaken were my nerves by all this that my next consecutive thinking found me once more in the gun room, ready to beat a retreat. But here I managed somehow to pull myself together, and to return to my original errand in the house. Convinced that the slamming of the door would have roused Mr. Bethel—if, indeed, anything were to rouse him again; and by this time, shaken as I was, I was prepared for the worst—the main staircase was not feasible.

I made my way, therefore, into the passage again to the servants' staircase and crept up it, one stair at a time, with the revolver clutched in my hand.

At the top of the kitchen staircase was a door, opening onto the main hall, and this I cautiously opened.

Save for the ticking of the tall clock on the staircase landing, the house was entirely silent. The silence and the closed door gave me back my ebbing courage, and I advanced a step or two along the hall. Here I was close to Gordon's room, and I felt for and tried the knob carefully. It was locked, and listening outside I could hear no movement from within. The relief I gathered from this was enormous, and although my position was still unpleasant enough, the fear of tragedy began to leave me.

There remained, I figured, merely to ascertain that Mr. Bethel's door was closed and locked, and I could beat a retreat which I felt was by no means ignominious. I made my way, therefore, to his door and tried it. It was fastened also, and I heard him move within; the heavy creak of his bed-spring, no doubt as he lay uneasily awake, waiting for the boy's return.

I hesitated there, wondering whether to call to him and tell him he was not alone and helpless, or to retire, satisfied that he was awake and prepared for any trouble that might come. But there were no further sounds from beyond the door, and I turned away and prepared to retrace my steps.

It was then that I became conscious of a light somewhere below. Not a light, rather, but where before had been absolute darkness there was now something else; a faint illumination which outlined the staircase well, and which was reddish in color.

And I will swear that a figure was standing at the foot of the stairs, apparently facing toward me and looking up. Or, rather, not a figure, but a face; the light was so faint that no portions of the body were visible. I will swear that it moved, not toward the dining room and a possible exit by the window of the gun room, as Halliday suggests, but still upturned, toward the library, and that within a foot or two of that door it disappeared.

I will swear that the red glow persisted for a moment or so after that disappeared and then slowly faded away. And I will also swear that I had no more intention of firing my revolver at that figure than I had of leaping down the staircase after it. The first knowledge that I had pulled the trigger came with the sound of the shot itself. I was certainly not aiming at the figure. If Mr. Greenough examines the mark left by the bullet, he will find, as Halliday and I did, that my bullet went almost directly down, and is embedded in the baseboard of the hall, near the den door. . . .

As a matter of fact, the whole sequence of events, ending with the shot, had stunned me. Almost immediately there was a crash of breaking glass in the library, as Halliday smashed a window with a porch chair, and the next moment was in the house and fumbling for the light switch inside the library door.

When he ran into the hall I told him what had happened, and he immediately set about his search. As Mr. Bethel was demanding, beyond his door, to know what was wrong, I went back to reassure him, but it required some time to induce him to unlock the door. Thus it was Halliday who made the first investigation downstairs.

He is confident no one escaped from the library, unless in that brief time while he was feeling for a light. But it is to be remembered that the floor near the window was covered with broken glass; no escape by that method could have been noiseless. At the same time, any theory of departure by the windows of the den is impossible, since we found all these windows closed and locked on the inside.

I am convinced that the intruder was not the secretary. As a matter of fact, he drove in a half-hour later, saw the lights in the house and hammered for admission, and surveyed our group in the hall with an amazement which, under any other circumstances, would be humorous. And I am also convinced that it was not the doctor. Mr. Bethel showing signs of collapse, Halliday telephoned to Hayward. He replied at once. Had he been at the house that night, he could not have made it. . . .

I have no explanation whatever of the fact that Halliday and Hayward later on found the gun-room window closed and locked, save that the intruder may have entered by it while I was working my way into the dining room; and that the cold air, the crash at the table, and the bursting open of the door in the hall, which so alarmed me, may have marked his passage through the room.

The disappearance of the figure and the blank darkness which followed that disappearance are difficult to account for, under any natural law at present known. I am not a spiritist, but it is to be remembered that only a second or so elapsed between Mr. Halliday's entrance by the broken window and his turning on of the lights.

Neither he nor I heard in that interval any movement; yet an escape over the broken glass of the window would certainly have made some sound. As I have said, the windows in the den were found to be closed and locked on the inside.

(End of memorandum for Mr. Greenough.)

August 15.

Greenough has come and gone. What he thinks of things now I cannot say, but at least I am, as I have had occasion more than once to record here, still at liberty. The fact that the revolver I used was Halliday's, and Halliday's supporting statement, no doubt are in my favor.

At the same time, it is clear that, although he listened carefully to my preliminary statement relative to our suspicions against Gordon, he was not greatly impressed by it.

"How did you and Mr. Halliday reconcile that theory with the sheep-killing?" he asked, when I had finished. "He wasn't here, then, was he?"

"No, that has puzzled us, of course."

"Then again," he went on, eyeing me, "he himself was knocked down and tied. I don't suppose you accuse him of that, too?"

"I've told you," I said impatiently, "that we haven't a case; it's a theory. That's all. Take for instance that rope—"

"Oh, come now, Mr. Porter! I've slipped out of my room at night over a woodshed; so have you, probably."

Coming down to the night of the 11th, he listened to my written statement without comment, save that he smiled somewhat over what he called my "ingenious conclusion." He also passed lightly over my picture of what followed; of Halliday's entrance, of Bethel brought down and sitting huddled in a chair in the library, somewhat dazed and showing signs of collapse. And of Gordon's return and our sudden realization of my predicament.

"Just what predicament?"

"I was in the house because I knew Gordon had a rope and a knife in his room. If we let him up there, and he did away with them, it left me in pretty poor shape."

"So you kept him downstairs! By force, he says."

"I wouldn't call it force. But we were three to his one, of course."

"In other words, you telephoned to the doctor, but you didn't telephone to Starr until Gordon came in and found you there."

"If you want to put it that way, yes."

"You broke into the house and found somebody there who had no business there. But you didn't think of calling on the police."

"What I felt we needed was not a policeman, but a medium."

"I suppose you have keys to the house?"

"I have."

"But you entered by this window?"

"Great heavens, man!" I said impatiently. "I don't carry those keys with me. I wasn't trying to get into the house, I went in because the window was open. And if you think I liked doing it, I'm here to tell you I didn't."

"You can't account for the window being locked, later?"

"I cannot. Why should I have locked it, if that's what you are trying to intimate? I had to get out again."

He abandoned that for the time.

"The point is this, Mr. Porter," he said. "You and Halliday have laid considerable emphasis on that knife. It was because Gordon had it that you were in the house, I understand."

"Had it and might use it," I amended.

"It was, in your opinion, either on him or in the room upstairs. But as it turned out, it was neither on him nor in his room. He denies ever owning such a knife."

"Halliday saw it. He's lying."

He asked me abruptly how long I had known Halliday, and his relationship to the family. Then he attacked Halliday's statement that he thought he had seen the lights of a car by Robinson's point, and had started for that.

"Mr. Halliday," he said, "says that he believed that this car was Mr. Bethel's and started toward it, giving you his revolver and leaving you alone; that he found no car there, and turned back. To support this statement, he says that a boat, lying in the creek there, had excited his suspicions because the oar-locks were wrapped. Muffled oar-locks are not uncommon things."

"The position of the boat was suspicious."

"Perhaps," he said. "But that was a matter for me to determine, not Mr. Halliday. As to the strips he maintains were wrapped around the oar-locks, I am not saying they were not there; but I am saying that they were gone when I went over the next morning to examine the boat."

What he had hoped to gain by that I do not know. He shifted rapidly, perhaps in the hope of somehow trapping me. Looking back over the interview, he seemed to be anxious to break down my story, rather than to be following any idea of his own. Halliday stated it fairly well when I reported the examination to him.

"He's got nothing," he said. "Nothing but you. And that's where his system breaks down; it might work, if you were guilty, but it isn't worth a tinker's dam, since you're not."

August 16.

As I had expected, Mr. Bethel intends to give up the house. He has so notified Thomas and Annie Cochran, and has sent me a note asking me to see him tonight.

The note was left by Gordon, and as I happened to be in the hall, it was I who received it.

He stiffened when he saw me, it being our first encounter since the other night.

"Mr. Bethel sent this," he said briefly, and started to go. On the veranda, however, he stopped and turned around. "Pretty dirty work the other night," he said, watching me. "And I'm not forgetting it."

Then he smiled, his curious sneering smile. "I'm not afraid, you know," he said. "I can take care of myself. I'm not worrying."

He thrust his hands into his pockets and turned, not toward the other house, but toward the road. Near the gates he began to whistle, and thus theatrically assuring me that he was at his ease, started toward Oakville.

I have learned today that he is leaving Mr. Bethel, and has gone to the city to look for another position.

The boy puzzles me. Here I am, more or less a specialist in boys; for more years than I care to remember I have known them, collectively and individually, but here is a new type.

He is weak; compared to that prognathous portion of Halladay's face for instance, he has no lower jaw. He completely lacks personality; he could, according to somebody's description of a similar type, be stood up against a whitewashed wall and erased with a good rubber. He is, one would say, almost too weak to be vicious.

But nature apparently gives to these otherwise defenseless creatures of hers a sort of low cunning with which to protect themselves. He has that cunning. . . .

Other things go on much as before. Greenough after three days of no further discoveries has gone again. The situation at the main house the other night has, thank God, not reached the press. The boat, with the mufflings gone from the oar-locks, still lies in the creek beyond Robinson's point, and the sole proof of such muffling, if the point is even brought up again, lies in the boathouse along with the broken lens, the bit of Gordon's cipher and the small screw cap of an ether can.

Our lovers move about their ordinary duties with an eye out, as one may say, each for the other. Vague as the future is, they have each other. They cannot turn the clock on. But there are times when there is a sort of despair in Halliday's face, and sometimes I see Edith sitting alone, her hands folded, looking three or four years ahead with a sort of tragic patience. So much, she seems to think, may happen in three or four years.

And the reward, on which she had so blithely counted, seems as far away as ever. As far away as her dreams of earning a fortune with her pen. She has had another rejection or two, and the heart has gone out of her.

But she has had her moment. Mail still continues to come in. Which reminds me that she received a curious letter yesterday. Because it may be construed to have a bearing on our situation I record it here, but as a matter of fact, one must make certain allowances: Edith's articles used my name in full, and a small amount of investigation by the professional mediumistic underground would supply some of the remainder. The Jane, for example, is quite easily accounted for.

But the remainder leaves me considerably puzzled. The boat, for instance. And that strange condition of Mr.— at the end, a heart which is normal apparently failing him, so that he would have fallen had he not been caught. For all the world as though —but I must pull myself together. The letter from Salem was not authentic; why should I believe this?

"Evanston, Ill., Aug. 12, 1922.

"Dear Madam:

"I have read with great interest your account of the strange occurrence at the lighthouse at Robinson's point, and would like to tell you of something which occurred here that same night and, allowing for the difference in time, at about the same hour.

"I am not a spiritualist, but following a small dinner here, it was suggested that we try table levitation, and against my husband's protests, this was arranged for.

"My husband, I may say, is not psychic in any way, and was greatly bored with the proceeding. We were not surprised, therefore, when after sitting in darkness for ten minutes or so, he fell asleep and began to breathe heavily.

"I tried to rouse him but was unable to, when the opinion was given that he was in a trance state. As none of us were familiar with that condition, and as he began to groan heavily, I was greatly alarmed. There was a doctor in the party, however, and on his saying that his pulse was all right, we sat quiet and waited.

Men of Genius Noted for Large Appetites

It would appear that the man of genius usually requires a large supply of substantial food. Intellectual work demands full nutrition to repair the waste of brain tissue. Scott was wont to attribute his extraordinary capacity for continuous work to his good digestion and the wholesome restraints of his appetite in his youth. "I have as keen an appetite now as any man," he said, "but I know when to stop."

Mirabeau is said to have been an enormous feeder, eating as much at a meal as would suffice three ordinary men. Talleyrand was also a noted eater. Goethe and Napoleon ate large quantities of food, but cared little for the quality. Bismarck was noted for his appetite, which was insatiable, but his food was of the simplest.

Many stories are told of the gross delight in food shown by the two Dumases, father and son, one of which is that the younger, being overtaken by a storm, took refuge in a hotel near Paris. Twenty-four turkeys were hanging upon the spit.

"And all for a single traveler," explained the host.

"It is my father!" exclaimed Alexandre, junior. And he was right.

Pigeon Got Through

A homing pigeon was liberated with an important message at Grand Fre, during the World war, at 2:35 p. m. during intense machine gun and artillery action. This bird delivered its message to the loft at Rampont, a distance of 24.84 miles, in 25 minutes. One leg had been shot off and the breast had been injured by a machine gun bullet, but even under these conditions the bird delivered the message.

An Obvious Need

Israel Zangwill used to be fond of telling a tale about his little son Oliver—now grown up—to illustrate the debt he owed to his wife for taking such good care of him. Seeing a snail in the middle of the road, near Far End (their home at East Preston, Sussex), Mr. Zangwill removed it humanely to the hedge.

"What's that for?" asked Oliver, then a mere baby. His father explained that if the foolish snail continued to wander about the middle of the road it would certainly be run over.

"Then why doesn't he get a wife to look after him?" asked the little boy, drawing upon his daily experience of woman's sphere in married life.—Exchange.

Disillusioned

"Well, I don't think much of women," said nine-year-old Joe, coming home from school.

"Why, what's happened to you and Katheryn?" queried his mother.

"Well, she only got forty in arithmetic today. That's just too dumb!"

A Sour Stomach

In the same time it takes a dose of soda to bring a little temporary relief of gas and sour stomach, Phillips Milk of Magnesia has acidity completely checked, and the digestive organs all tranquilized. Once you have tried this form of relief you will cease to worry about your diet and experience a new freedom in eating.

This pleasant preparation is just as good for children, too. Use it whenever coated tongue or fetid breath signals need of a sweetener. Physicians will tell you that every spoonful of Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid. Get the genuine, the name Phillips is important. Imitations do not act the same!

PHILLIPS Milk of Magnesia

More Speed Foreseen

Scientists meeting in Paris recently predicted that within a short time man will be traveling 750 miles an hour. They point to the marked increase in auto speed records between 1921, when it was 107 miles an hour, to 1928, when a new record of nearly 215 miles an hour was set.

Quart of Water Cleans Kidneys

Take a Little Salts If Your Back Hurts, or Bladder is Troubling You

No man or woman can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Eating too much rich food creates acids, which excite the kidneys. They become overworked from the strain, get sluggish and fail to filter the waste and poisons from the blood. Then we get sick. Rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, dizziness, sleeplessness and urinary disorders often come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys, or your back hurts, or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding, begin drinking a quart of water each day, also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast and in a few days your kidneys may act fine.

This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to flush and stimulate the kidneys; also to help neutralize the acids in the system, so they no longer cause irritation, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to help keep the kidneys clean and active and the blood pure, thereby often avoiding serious kidney complications.

THE LAST LAUGH

Something less than a hundred years ago the city fathers of a small town in a New England state were debating over the advisability of changing from whale oil to the newly discovered kerosene for street lamps.

The town was stirred by the controversy until finally a citizen, doubtless of the reactionary school, contributed this bit of verse:

"It would not cause us great surprise
If some presumptuous ass
Should snatch the lightning from the skies,
Or light our streets with gas."

The author has been forgotten. But he unknowingly proved himself a true prophet. What was conceived in ire and sent on its way as a bit of withering satire became an actuality, probably within the author's lifetime.

Those who are skeptical of our modern industrial age and its future may find themselves in the same position as this village wit. Progress waits for no man, and has a talent for turning jokes back upon their creators.

"PRO" VS. AMATEUR

Much ado has been made of late respecting the status of various figures in the world of sport—whether they should be classified as professionals or amateurs. A notable case is that of William Tilden, the tennis star, who was barred from amateur circles because he wrote articles about the game in which is is an expert.

Somehow we have been unable to draw the lines so fine. Still, maybe we don't understand the matter. Certainly we don't understand why even an amateur may not write about his game. If he is not permitted to write about it, why not forbid him to talk about it?

And now another scandal has come to light. A Chicago high school checker player has been caught red-handed playing in a tournament for money. Five dollars was the prize, and that makes him a professional! What is sport coming to, anyway.

GOVERNOR ROOSEVELT'S PLAN

Governor Roosevelt of New York has submitted to the New York Crime Commission a plan whereby the state would establish a corps of highly trained criminal investigators, available at any time, to aid law enforcement officials in rural localities.

Although every section may have adequate police protection, Governor Roosevelt says that "there remains, however, one other very important function . . . which should not properly be laid upon a force primarily designated to apprehend criminals and preserve order . . . detection of a criminal in those cases where he is not caught red-handed in the act. Application of modern methods requires men who have made extensive study of the subject and have mastered an increasingly difficult technique."

The matter of crime detection has passed far beyond the finger-print stage. There are, according to the Governor, "men who can, with the aid of the microscope, accurately determine whether any particular bullet has been fired from any particular weapon; . . . the story told by every motor tire track has been carefully studied; the preservation and identification of footprints, a hundred different tell-tale signs, which would mean nothing to the layman, stand as a clear trail before the eyes of these specially trained investigators.

"That such facilities should be put at the disposal of our country sheriffs has seemed to be becoming increasingly important, owing to the growing disposition of the murderer in the large city to carry away the body of his victim by automobile to some sparsely settled and desolate locality where it is left in the hope that the local auhorities will be unable to trace even the identity of the victim."

Governor Roosevelt's suggestion is in line with the very successful English system where every community has at its disposal the experts of the famous Scotland Yard. It goes at crime from the right angle, that what we need is better police methods and enforcement of the laws we now have.

NAVIGATION BY RADIO

While radio has been employed as an aid to navigation of both ships and aircraft for several years, by means of radio beacons of various types, the use of this mysterious force is destined to play an ever increasing part in directing these craft safely along their courses.

R. H. Marriott, consulting engineer of the Federal Radio Commission, recently described a newly developed method whereby what many be described as an electric track may be laid for both ships and aircraft to follow.

This "track" consists of a cable carrying a high frequency current, which induces a similar frequency in a coil carried by steamer or airplane. When the craft is on its course, which is directly over the cable, the helmsman hears a buzzing signal, which dies out if he gets off the "track."

These cables may be laid down in the middle of a harbor channel for the guidance of ships, or strung on poles like a telegraph line from city to city for the direction of airplanes and dirigibles. Dangers from rain, snow or fog, the terrors of the navigator by sea or air, would thus be practically eliminated. As a large percentage of accidents to both ships and airplanes are due to these dangers, the great value of the device described by Mr. Marriott may be readily appreciated.

AN ELECTRICAL NATION

According to an estimate by the United States Geological Survey, production of electricity for public use in this country reached a total of 88 billion wilowatt hours in 1928, or an amount equal to that of all the rest of the world combined.

At the close of the year there were about 23 million consumers of electricity, of which 19 million were household users, 62 per cent of the entire population now living in electrically wired homes.

The extension of electricity to 350,000 farms has been a striking development of the last few years, and this movement is proceeding with great rapidity.

The average price for household electricity throughout the country is now 18 per cent below pre-war levels, while general living costs are 65 per cent above. Power from central generating stations has replaced steam in industry, and the local installation of steam boilers and engines in factories has almost ceased.

Electric plants and equipment now have a total value of approximately 10 billion dollars, and the industry's securities are owned by more than 1,500,000 individuals, most of whom are customers of the companies whose stocks they hold.

Truly the United States is an electrical nation, and largely because of that fact it leads in industry and business, which in turn is making possible a general standard of living superior to that of any other country in the world's history.

CLARK MEMORIAL STAMP

On February 26 a new 2-cent postage stamp was issued in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the capture of Fort Sackville (Vincennes, Indiana) by George Rogers Clark during the Revolutionary war.

Clark's conquest of the British forts in the northwest, under authority of Governor Patrick Henry of Virginia, was of far reaching importance in adding that territory to the domain of the colonies by the treaty of 1783, which ended the Revolution.

George Rogers Clark is not to be confused with his younger brother, William Clark, who was one of the leaders of the Lewis and Clark expedition across the continent to the mouth of the Columbia river in 1806. A bronze tablet to William Clark was unveiled on the site of his old home in St. Louis in 1906, on the one hundredth anniversary of the expedition.

Both brothers performed notable services for their country in its early days and are well deserving of the recognition which has been accorded them.

PRINCE VISITS MINERS

The Prince of Wales spent three days recently among the almost starving miners and their families in Northumberland and Durham, after which he said:

"I have been deeply touched by what I have seen of the bravery and patience of these poor people. It has been very difficult to know what to do to solve this most pressing problem."

It is believed that the Prince's visit and the publicity attending it will bring the desperate condition of these unfortunate people to public attention and lead to some measure of relief. During the holidays a personal appeal by the Prince over the radio in behalf of the unemployed miners brought a large contribution, but only enough for temporary relief for a portion of the sufferers.

It is pleasing to note the solicitude of the Prince for these distressed people, and it is hoped that some means may be found to alleviate their condition, which is pitiful in the extreme.

A "mechanical violinist" which operates like a player piano from a perforated roll of paper has been invented by a Frenchman and was recently displayed in Paris.

TO PROTECT NIAGARA

After several years of discussion, a treaty has at last been signed by Canada and the United States looking to the preservation of Niagara Falls. A few months ago a joint board recommended a $7,500,000 program for this purpose, after an investigation of conditions.

The rate of erosion was found by the board to be not as great as was feared, being very slight on the American side and from three to four feet a year in the Horseshoe. Extensive protective works were recommended, however, in connection with which it is believed that considerable additional water may be diverted for power purposes without affecting the scenic beauty of the Falls.

Much anxiety has been felt concerning the possibility of a serious impairment of the grandeur of this great natural spectacle, therefore the action of the two governments in providing for its preservation will be approved by the people of both countries.

TELEPHONES IN SEATTLE

There were ninety telephones in the city of Seattle in 1884, and only 900 in 1896. This number had increased to 4,300 in 1901, and to 23,000 in 1906. The 50,000 mark was attained in 1914, since which time the telephone growth of Seattle has been very rapid, the number of instruments now in use being more than 115,000.

Herbert Hoover, Jr., son of the president-elect, has on his merits won an important position with the Western Air Express, operating between San Francisco and Los Angeles.

BIG BAY TOLL BRIDGE READY FOR OPENING

Official certification that the San Francisco Bay Toll Bridge was completed and safe for travel and that the company had complied with the provisions of its franchise was made made by the county supervisors Monday morning at a special session.

George Herrington, attorney for the bridge company, presented the certificate, in which it was stated that the provisions of the ordinance granting the francise were carried out. Arthur Baty, president of the company, verified the various points outlined in the certificate. A duplicate certificate, as adopted by the board was forwarded to the Alameda county supervisors.

Attorney Herrington declared that there was some question as to whether the state or the county has jurisdiction over traffic across the bridge, so the matter could be covered both ways. The board therefore passed rules prohibiting a speed greater than 40 miles per hour, pedestrians crossing the bridge, parking vehicles on the span, driving livestock over it, driving an automobile over the structure while under the influence of liquor or drugs

Batty announced that the contract called for the opening of the bridge by June 16, but that it will be formally opened to the public on March 2, more than three months ahead of schedule.

The action of the supervisors followed a careful inspection trip of the new bridge made on Saturday when officials of the company and county officers of both San Mateo and Alameda county drove over the span and carefully examined the bridge and its equipment. The party then motored to the Castlewood Country Club near Pleasanton where I. B. Parsons of Hayward, acted as host at a luncheon.

"ESCAPE" TO BE PLAYED AT THE GEARY THEATRE

"Escape," John Galsworthy's thrilling play, exactly as produced by Winthrop Ames for more than a year in New York, comes to the Geary Geary Theatre, San Francisco, for an engagement of two weeks beginning Monday, March 4.

Vernon Steele, best remembered as the leading man for Ethel Barrymore and Doris Keane, heads the all-English cast—incidentally the third all-English success to play San Francisco this season and following closely on the heels of the English opera company here.

"Escape" has just been listed by Burns Mantel, the New York Critic, as one of the ten best plays of the season. It was originally produced in London, running for about a year, and it is said to be Galsworthy's last play he intends writing.

"Escape" is in a prologue and nine scenes divided into two acs. There are twenty-seven characters in the play—a remarkable large company—and advance notices pay special attention to the excellence of the supporting cast.

A woman of the streets, two women on a picnic, a married womar alone in a hotel, a girl about 12 years old, two elderly single women living alone in an English estate and a hotel maid are all directly or indirectly concerned in the affairs of Steele in the role of Captain Denant before he goes to prison and after his escape.

WESTERN PACIFIC WILL BUY NEW ROLLING STOCK

Orders totalling approximately $1,000,000 have been placed by the Western Pacific Company for additional rolling stock consisting of 250 automobile cars, 50 tank cars and flat cars. The cars will be of the latest type and will be especially designed to provide equiptment best suited to the requirements of the shipper. Construction will be expedited so that delivery of the cars will be made for use in handling the current year's traffic.

The automobile cars, which will be built by the Pullman Car and Manufacturing Corporation, Chicago, will be 50 feet 6 inches in length. The Western Pacific is one of the important automobile carrying lines to the Pacific Coast and the purchase of these 250 cars represents an additional contribution by the Western Pacific to equipment requirements of the automobile manufacturing industry and also the makers of furniture and other commodities requiring cars of large cubical capacity.

The tank cars, which will be built by the General American Tank Car Corporation, Chicago, will have a capacity of 12,000 gallons. They are designed primarily for the movement of railroad fuel oil and will be used entirely on Western Pacific rails. The freight movement on the Western Pacific has been expanding to an extent that it has been found necessary to augment existing quota of tank cars to provide always for an adequate fuel oil supply.

The flat cars will be built by the Pacific Car and Foundry Company of Seattle and will be used for transportation of tractors, heavy machinery, forest products, etc., requiring this type of equipment.

San Diego will be the scene of the 1930 convention of the Retail Clothiers, Furnishers and Hatters' Association of California and the Men's Apparel Club, it was decided recently at the closing session of the convention held at the Hotel Oakland in Oakland.

Authough D. F. McIntire, Lake county probation officer, got a $10 raise eight years ago, he discovered that he has never collected it. The back pay amounts to more than $950, and McIntire filed suit against County Auditor B. J. Turner for the money. McIntire says his pay was raised from $25 to $35 a month by the juvenile court law in 1921.

A year and a month after her marriage in Seattle to Setsuza Ota, a Japanese jiu jitsu champion, shocked the social circles in which her birth, breeding and beauty gave her leadership, Lucy Banning of the California Bannings died in Florence, Italy, recently. Word of the death from influenza was received in a cablegram from Mrs. Mary Banning Norris of Paris, a sister. The body will be brought home for burial.

A car driven by Mrs. Marie Rogers of Los Angeles, and with H. C. Le Nanquais of San Francisco, seated beside her, plunged over a 200-foot grade on the Pedro Mountain road recently and came to a stop without either passenger being seriously hurt. Sam Centoni of Half Moon Bay, who took Mrs. Rogers and Le Nanquais to Mills Memorial Hospital in San Mateo, said that, as he was going up the grade the Rogers automobile struck his car a glancing blow, then veered and went over the embankment. He helped the two to climb up and then took them to the hospital. They were treated for cuts and bruises.

The "effect" of the State oil prospecting law was interpreted in a decision of the District Court of Appeal denying Thomas A. Joyner of Huntington Beach the right to prospect for oil on tidelands within the city limits. Joyner had petitioned for a writ of mandate to compel W. S. Kingsbury, State Surveyor-General, to issue a permit authorizing him to drill along the shore line of Huntington Beach. Invoking that clause in the prospecting law which proscribes land "fronting" the city limits and for one mile on each side the court ruled that in effect the law must also have been meant to include such land not "front-in" the city but necessary to the "use and enjoyment of its seashore.

Ugene Bialock, Porterville attorney, has accepted appointment as deputy District Attorney of Los Angeles county under Buron Fitts. He will report for duty in the southland March 1.

Martin Ray Kilgore, 22, Stanford University graduate, who killed F. A. Bartley, "in defense of my family's honor," is free. Acquitted by a jury after four hours' deliberation, he was believed to be the first defendant ever freed on a murder charge in Southern California on the plea of the "unwritten law." Kilgore charged Bartley with attempting to "wreck" his home. He shot the rancher, he said, after his mother had confessed to him an illicit affair with the middle-aged dairyman, the details of which Mrs. Kilgore related from the witness stand.

Give California uniform traffic laws and judges who will apply uniform penalties for their violation and the orgy of automobile killings in this state will be cut at once by at least half. This was the message of speakers at the February meeting of the San Diego County League of Municipalities, held at La Mesa Country Club. Mayor George Sheldon of La Mesa was chairman, and arranged the program. The speakers were Carroll M. Counts of Los Angeles, claims attorney of the Automobile Club of Southern California, and Sergt. "Mike" Neely of the San Diego motorcycle police squad. Supervisor Ed Hastings was called upon, and in an exceptionally good impromptu address added more on the same subject.

Into the hopper of the coming legislative session will be pitched a bond issue measure providing for the spending of more than $300,000,000 for water projects throughout the state—a blanket proposition with plenty of surface allurement only. Legislative committee activity presages this. Briefly, the projected set-up involves: Construction of a dam at Kennett for impounding Sacramento River flood waters, to cost $80,000,000; a salt water barrier across Suisun Bay at Army Point, to cost $50,000,000; the expending of $24,000,000 for a canal up the San Joaquin River with levee, locks and pumps; construction of a $150,000,000 aqueduct from the Boulder dam to the Southern California region. If prompted by the enthusiasm for thus mortgaging the entire State, the plan is expanded to include, for instance, the tricounty Santa Ana River project and a few others, the aggregate will nick the $500,000,000 mark.

With the opening of a permanent foreign exhibits salon on the mezzanine floor of the Chamber of Commerce Building at Los Angeles in which the governments of Japan, Mexico, Chile and Ecuador have authorized displays, one of the most far-reaching educational and speaking programs ever inaugurated in Southern California on the subject of foreign trade was begun, according to James H. Smiley, general chairman of the chamber committee on observance of Foreign Trade Week.

On the basis of a population of 1,600,000 in the Bay region, one of every sixteen residents had an airplane ride at least once last year, according to a compilation by the Pacific Flyer, an aeronautical publication. Mills Field and Oakland Airport, the two largest in the territory at the present time, accounted for 74,326 passengers, and Alameda, San Leandro and Palo Alto accounted for another 25,000.

Ben C. Wallace, prominent Stockton undertaker, was appointed a San Joaquin county supervisor by Governor C. C. Young, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of James Y. Coates, defendant in the recent alleged bribe case in Stockton. The appointment came as a complete surprise to Wallace, who was not a candidate for the position. Faced with twenty applicants for the post, many of them sponsored by strong organizations in Stockton, the governor picked his own man.

Reserve officers of the United States Air Corps are to be students of an advanced course in aircraft science, according to an official announcement issued by Lieut. Walter K. Burgess, commanding officer at Clover Field, Santa Monica. The course is given as part of the national defense program of the government to keep all members of the Reserve Corps actively interested in continuing their training along technical aeronautical lines.

Cumbersome and overtechnical legal procedure, though minimized in California, still affords too many loopholes for the American criminal, Judge Rolfe L. Thompson, newest appointee to the State Appellate bench, declared recently. Speaking of the giant strides noted recently by criminologists in crime as a profession, Judge Thompson said that Californians may take comfort from the fact that justice moves more swiftly and surely here than in any other state.

A campaign to secure for San Diego county one of the federal veterans' hospitals recently authorized in Washington is under way, with all veterans' organizations in the vicinity participating. Delegates from these organizations met at the San Diego Chamber of Commerce rooms and elected Charles C. Quitman, deputy San Diego city attorney, as their president for the campaign, which is to be carried directly to Gen. Hines in the war department.

Testimony that Lawrence Edwards, Stockton attorney, bought parts of a still which the Government says was later found in a raid on the million-dollar Hotchkiss ranch, Bethel island, Contra Costa county, was given by Sheriff George Lucot, Amador county, in Federal Judge St. Sure's court. Edwards is on trial with Byron A. Bearce, promoter, and Marius W. Hotchkiss, son of the ranch owner, charged with conspiracy to violate the internal revenue laws. William Dorsey, a fourth defendant on trial, was a minor participant, it is alleged. The Government contends that all had a part in the operation of a still found in April 1928.

Eyes of the engineering universe turn again toward the Golden Gate as preparations are completed for the opening of the San Francisco Bay toll bridge from San Mateo, on the peninsula, to Mt. Eden, opposite Hayward, on the East Bay shore. This structure slightly more than seven miles in length, exclusive of its approaches, will be the longest highway bridge in the world and takes its place alongside the span now trussed above Carquinez Strait, which is the longest suspended highway bridge in existence. Present plans are to open the new lower-bay structure to traffic on March 2. Three years ago only one bridge, the Southern Pacific's rail trestle across the heel, spanned any part of the entire sweep of San Francisco Bay and its principal tributaries. Today two others are complete and in operation, a third is ready for traffic, five others are contemplated and in various stages of preliminary arrangements, and still another is a possibility.

The State Bar Association committee declared active war on "ambulance-chasing" in its closing session of the monthly meeting recently by naming a committee of five to investigate fully and report to the bar as a whole. All of the committee members are from Los Angeles. It was explained that complaints to the board of governors indicate the situation is worse there than at any other point in the State, thus accounting for the centralization of the committee. Following hearings in Los Angeles, the committee will conduct others throughout the State before completing the report, it was announced by Thomas C. Ridgeway, president. Members of the board decried the asserted practice of "ambulance-chasing," which, in effect, is the practice of certain attorneys of frequenting or having representatives frequent emergency hospitals and soliciting representation where there is chance for a damage action. The board of governors said it actually had been brought to their attention that some attorneys became so unethical in their conduct they would "be sitting on the steps of the hospital waiting for the ambulance to bring the injured person in."

Roseville lays claim to the "meanest robber" as the result of the holdup of the Myers Garage on Riverside Avenue. C. F. Myers, proprietor of the garage, and his two children, Dorothy and Charles, 7 and 8 years of age, were in the rear of the establishment when a stranger entered and asked for a can of radiator fluid. Without glancing up from his work, Myers asked the children to give the stranger the fluid. On reaching the office, the man produced a revolver and "covered" the children while he rifled the cash register of $22. He disappeared in the darkness.

EATING CAKE

"I was what you might have called a foolish fly," said the fly.

The flies buzzed around and said: "Buzz, buzz, why?"

The flies were wandering about, upside down, on the ceiling.

"I thought I would not move away," said the fly, "from where I had been during the warm weather.

"My family had told me that it would grow very cold and that I could not stand it.

"I must leave with them for a warmer climate.

"But I didn't think that I would feel the cold. I thought that I had had such marvelous escapes all summer from fly paper and such things that I could stand the cold.

"Of course I didn't really know what the cold was like."

"You poor fly," said the others.

"And how I did suffer with the cold. I drooped and thought I could never stand it.

"But I found one spot where it was nice and warm. It was in a sunny window near a thing they called a radiator.

"When night came and the sun had gone down and the radiator didn't seem to be so warm it felt very cold to me.

"How cold it can get!" and the fly shivered.

"The next day, after my first very cold night," continued the fly, "I went to another sunny window, and from there I hopped down into a suitcase which was lying down on the floor, open.

The Radiator Didn't Seem to Be So Warm.

"I saw in it a piece of cake which was later packed in a box. It was a special kind of cake that was being taken away in the suitcase.

"But, do you know, I got caught in the suitcase? There weren't many things in it, and somehow or other I escaped being crushed.

"What marvelous escapes you do have!" said the other flies.

"I am lucky," said the fly, "but oh, how foolish I was to have tried to stay in a cold place."

"You were a foolish fly," they all agreed, "and still you were very lucky, too."

Then the fly began to buzz some more, and this was what he hummed, in his buzzing fly voice:

"I was a foolish fly,
A foolish fly was I.
I thought I'd be so bold
And stay where it was cold.
Alas, I almost froze,
But then I took a doze,
And in a suitcase came,
That's how I've won some fame."

"You certainly have," said the other flies, "and you will be famous for ever after because you traveled in a suitcase and came to a warmer climate after the rest of us.

"A fly's life is none too long. We might as well be warm and well fed while we may."

"We'll be warm and well fed while we may," repeated the fly.

"Many people," the fly continued, "don't like flies. They say we're not healthy."

"Who cares for people?" said the other flies.

But the first fly was so proud of his adventures, and most especially he was proud of the cake he had eaten when he had traveled in the suitcase.

"Eating, eating, eating cake,
Quite a little I did take,
So I didn't come to harm
But traveled where it was quite warm."

And the fly continued to buzz and to chatter about the joys of eating cake on a most unusual trip.

FAMOUS JOCKEY PRAISES ERVAST

Roscoe Goose Passes on Tia Juana Sensation.

Perhaps the cold Ervast after all is a fair kind of a race horse and will justify the confidence most everybody in California has placed in him "to beat any three-year-old in America."

Such a good judge of horses as Roscoe Goose, famous as a jockey a few years ago and who more recently has gained fame as a trainer, puts his stamp of approval on the fleet son of Pacines.

Trainer Goose, at Tia Juana with a division of the Johnson N. Camden stable, does not become hilarious in his enthusiasm for Ervast. But he does say "Ervast is a colt of the conformation that will carry weight and also has extreme speed over a distance of ground."

To those who know Roscoe Goose that's putting a pretty high mark on Ervast.

Of all the trainers—old and young—we have met, Goose is among the most conservative. He rode Donerail to victory in the Kentucky derby of 1913 and has accomplished numerous feats on the turf that would excuse him a bit if he cared to carry his knowledge of horses and how they run to the extreme.

But Goose has never been known to go that far. Rather, he hits the other extreme. If he's training a horse that stands out to win by a city block, Goose will tell you, "I think this horse has a chance to win today."

And because he says Ervast looks like a real running horse even after a hasty inspection out at Tia Juana, that is evidence enough that this native son thoroughbred of California cannot be taken too lightly, regardless of what sort of horses he is running against.

Goose reports that he timed the colt for the first half mile in one of his races in :46 1-5. And he added, "He was just breezing along in front by five lengths."

There is at least one Kentuckian pulling hard for an Ervast triumph in the Tia Juana derby, Coffroth handicap, and even in the Kentucky derby. C. W. Hay, general manager of the Washington park race track, in Chicago, owns Pacines and has the sire of the colt at the head of his thoroughbred stud at Scotland farm, near Frankfort, Ky.

Until Ervast came along Sir Peter was the most famous son of Pacines. However, Pacines has produced many winners, despite the fact that only a few of them have ever reached stake class.

Manager McGraw Waited Forty Years for Star

John McGraw has obtained a pitcher from his old home town after waiting forty years.

Into the New York Giants' office recently came Albert C. Kenny from Olean, N. Y. Kenny was the manager of the Olean team in the New York State league in 1889—and John J. McGraw was his third baseman, shortstop, second baseman and pinch hitter.

"Here's that ball player I've been trying to get for you for forty years," announced Kenny. And then he introduced Floyd Johnson, a twenty-one-year-old boy who pitches left-handed and who comes from Truxton.

"Sign him," said McGraw. "I was born and raised in Truxton and I will take a chance on this lad.'"

Look Alike to Goose

Goose Goslin, sterling outfielder of Washington, is equally good against right or left-handed pitching. The Goose has recovered the full use of his throwing arm and will star again for Clark Griffith this year.

Uhle to Undergo Knife to Regain His Pitching Form

George Uhle, veteran American league pitcher, who recently was sold by the Cleveland Indians to the Detroit Tigers, is to have his right arm treated by Dr. Charles Spencer of Los Angeles, doctor of ailing baseball arms, in an effort to regain his old-time twirling form.

Uhle is being sent by Frank Navin, owner of the Tigers. After an operation, Uhle will join his teammates at their spring training camp at Phoenix, Ariz.

For the last few years, Uhle's salary arm has been troubling him. He had a bad season last year, winning but twelve games and losing seventeen.

Blanket for Soldiers Is Best Yet Devised

That an army advances on its stomach is not news and many will also agree that one of its greatest enemies rides on its back. This enemy is in the form of weight of the pack which necessity demands be carried. The announcement by the quartermaster general of the army of a new blanket is a matter of considerable importance.

The principal features about the new blanket are that it contains twice the warmth of other blankets of the same weight and is water resistant. In certain tests water was suspended in some blankets for 60 hours and did not penetrate the blankets, although no waterproofing compound is used. It remains soft and springy even if tightly rolled and can be made on the looms of any worsted mill, according to the report.

SAME PRESCRIPTION HE WROTE IN 1892

When Dr. Caldwell started to practice medicine, back in 1875, the needs for a laxative were not as great as today. People lived normal lives, ate plain, wholesome food, and got plenty of fresh air. But even that early there were drastic physics and purges for the relief of constipation which Dr. Caldwell did not believe were good for human beings.

The prescription for constipation that he used early in his practice, and which he put in drug stores in 1892 under the name of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a liquid vegetable remedy, intended for women, children and elderly people, and they need just such a mild, safe bowel stimulant.

This prescription has proven its worth and is now the largest selling liquid laxative. It has won the confidence of people who needed it to get relief from headaches, biliousness, flatulence, indigestion, loss of appetite and sleep, bad breath, dyspepsia, colds, fevers. Never in History Has So Much Wealth Fallen Into Lap of Education

By PRESIDENT A. L. LOWELL, Harvard University.

THE effects of the great war surprised us. One of the results affects us deeply here. The people who have suffered since the war on the continent of Europe more acutely than any other class have been the professors, because they were paid in a constantly falling currency. Their means of publishing books and of getting apparatus has been greatly diminished.

What effect is that likely to have? Is it not almost certain to retard their growth? Is it not sure to hamper their work? On the other hand, there has never been a time in the history of this country, and I think the history of mankind, when wealth has fallen into the lap of learning as it has since the end of the war. I cannot help feeling that that has a moral for us.

We have been more distinguished in the past in building railroads than we have in producing great books, books that turned the current of human thought in new directions. We have been more successful in our industries than we have been, on the whole, in our learning. I notice at the present time that the public at large thinks the object of institutions of higher learning is to win football games.

Perhaps they are right. But our view is quite different, yours and mine. We feel as if we owe something to men. We feel as if we had received the sacred fire and that that sacred fire must be kept alive. Perhaps you agree with me that if we let that fire go out we deserve to be buried alive like the vestal virgin. We have built the land of our country. We have made the desert fertile; we have established great factories and we ought to do it.

Now is the time when we will begin to sow the seed of the greatest intellectual movement that the world has ever known. If not we do not deserve to be where we are. We ought to feel that the time has come when if our country is going to be great we must begin now. Now we must feel the spirit of that inner voice intellectually. We have a right to feel everything is before us. It is for us now to make the contributions which our fathers have made it possible that we should make. So far as intellectual pursuits are concerned we are living in the carnivorous age.

Dishonesty in Business Is Now Scarce Enough to Be Sensational News

By OWEN D. YOUNG, General Electric Company Official.

Our big business is no longer feared by the people. Exploiters no longer own them.

Their shares are spread from one end of the country to the other. Broadly speaking, the vast organizations are in skilled hands and the roads are reasonably safe.

The American public 25 years ago was more or less in the position of an old friend of mine whose horse became frightened when it saw its first automobile and jumped a fence, wrecking the buggy in which the old man was riding. The driver of the car stopped and asked the old gentleman if he could do anything for him.

"No," the old fellow answered. "I think you've done enough for today."

The American people had the same fear of big business as the old man's horse did of the auto when it first appeared around the bend, snorting and clattering, 25 years ago, but with the present high-geared machines, run by careful, expert drivers, that fear has largely disappeared.

The danger today comes not from bad men in business or bad principles, but from "the difficulty of applying right principles to complicated situations. Our greatest risk is in the mistaken judgment of good drivers where the traffic is heavy and the signals are complicated.

By and large, looking over the quarter century with which I have been familiar, I am pleased with the rapid progress which we are making toward the right in business. We are not perfect, and never shall be, but we are training our young men with a sense of their great responsibilities and we are providing them with experience from our own mistakes. As time goes on, I feel that the "right" in business will more and more prevail. The larger business becomes the more scrupulously careful the administration of it will be.

Aimlessness Is Greatest Danger That Now Threatens Democracy

By REV. CHARLES FRANCIS POTTER, New York.

Democracy's greatest danger, whether in politics or religion, is aimlessness. In an absolute monarchy the citizens have their purpose selected for them. The people of Italy know what they are aiming for because Mussolini tells them. They are making great progress because they are unified in purpose. The same thing is true of Roman Catholicism.

Democratic countries and religions are likely to waste their efforts and diminish their power by changing from one ideal to another as different factions gain control. Protestantism has passed through a period of democratic experiment, but the era of divisions has ended and a strong unifying movement is evident. The Federal Council of Churches has afforded an excellent means for correlating the divided issues of Protestantism and giving scattered factions a new purpose. Protestantism will triple its strength when it unifies around some great ideal.

Discussions of Problems of Life Are Properly Part of Our Religion

By DR. KARL REILAND, New York.

There is bound to be a conflict between science and religion, according to the commonly accepted meanings of those words at the present time.

Ninety-five per cent of all orthodox religious beliefs are opposed to the assurances which science affords us.

Whatever touches human life is a part of religion and consequently certain aspects of politics rightfully are discussed in churches.

Those who base their beliefs and conduct on what their ancestors set up as right are in error. There is no revelation in the past which is fit to be the guide for the future. What you are, as you are, is your religion.

This is a world that demands work and effort, it is a world of evolution and not evasion. The moment we get better acquainted with problems and thoughts, no matter how hard or opposed they may seem at the start, we find in them something useful and helpful. The result is worth the effort.

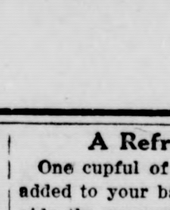
Bottle Drifts Many Miles

One of the longest "bottle voyages" ever recorded has just been ended in the finding of a bottle on the shore of a small island near Japan, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. According to the form it contained, the phial was thrown from a ship about 250 miles west of Mexico, November 14, 1926. It has thus traveled at least 6,500 miles, according to the drift of the ocean currents, and probably much farther. These bottles are set adrift by the hydrographic office with instructions that the finder return the paper inside after it has been marked to tell the place and date of its recovery, so that data may be obtained as to the direction and speed of the sea currents.

Neal's Mother Has Right Idea



Within a few months there will be no more feverish, bilious, headachy, constipated, pale and puny children. That prophecy would surely come true if every mother could see for herself how quickly, easily, and harmlessly the bowels of babies and children are cleansed, regulated, given tone and strength by a product which has proved its merit and reliability to do what is claimed for it to millions of mothers in over fifty years of steadily increasing use.

As mothers find out from using it how children respond to the gentle influence of California Fig Syrup by growing stronger, sturdier and more active daily they simply have to tell other mothers about it. That's one of the reasons for its overwhelming sales of over four million bottles a year.

A Western mother, Mrs. Neal M. Todd, 1701 West 27th St., Oklahoma City, Okla., says: "When my son, Neal, was three years old he began having constipation. I decided to give him California Fig Syrup and in a few days he was all right and looked fine again. This pleased me so much that I have used Fig Syrup ever since for all his colds or little upset spells. It always stops his trouble quick, strengthens him, makes him eat."

Always ask for California Fig Syrup by the full name and see that the carton bears the word "California." Then you'll get the genuine.

Mother and Daughter Praise Vegetable Compound

Johnson City, N. Y. —"My daughter was only 20 years old, but for two years she worked in misery. She was all run-down, nervous, had aches and pains and no appetite. I was taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound with good results so she decided to try it. Before she had taken two bottles her appetite was better, she was more cheerful and was able to work. I cannot praise your medicine too highly. It is wonderful for mothers and for daughters. It's surely 'a friend in need'."—Mrs. L. E. Hall, 223 Floral Avenue, Johnson City, N. Y.

Quick Thinking

Shoeless, he climbed the stairs, opened the door of the room, entered and closed it after him without being detected. Just as he was about to get into bed his wife, half aroused from slumber, turned and sleepily said:

"Is that you, Fido?"

The husband, telling the rest of the story, said:

"For once in my life I had real presence of mind. I licked her hand."

If dissatisfied with other Coal—remember ABERDEEN.

Mother: "If you wanted to go fishing, why didn't you come and ask me first?"

Johnny: "Because I wanted to go fishing."

"Is your Packard friend coming tonight?"

"No."

"Dodge Brothers?"

"No, dearest, this is Willys Night."

To our way of thinking, the most gloomy individual in the world is the one who has no home. Let us figure with you on a home of your own; it might be easier than you think.

Lady: "But don't you find that horseback riding gives one a headache?"

Instructor: "Oh, no, madam, just the reverse."

No matter how efficient a parlor maid may be, she can only take care of one keyhole at a time.

Virtue is its own reward. It is seldom the black sheep of the family has the wool pulled over its eyes.

"Do you believe in dreams, Riley?"

"Oi do," said Riley.

"Well, phwat's ut a sign of if a married man dreams he's a bachelor?"

"That's easy. It's a sign he's goin' to meet wid a great disappointment when he wakes up."

Better Than Just Good Enough—Lumber, Roofing, Shingles Paint, Hardware, etc.
